Focus on specific industries

Good office design combines the right mix of creativity and practicality, with factors influencing the mix often dictated by the specific industry. Artlink recently had the opportunity to do a number of projects for law firms, using its more than 17 years of experience to create offices that convey the law firms corporate images, while catering to needs specific to legal offices.

Most law firms want the design concept to convey a sense of trustworthiness and discretion. Other key issues include for example: confidentiality (do enclosed rooms need to be totally soundproof?), filing (what are the sizes of the files used and how many linear metres of filing are required?), and support functions (how much space is required for copying, collating and distribution?)

In the past few months, Sullivan & Cromwell, a client since 1992, retained Artlink for expansion projects in Hong Kong and in Beijing. Additionally, Artlink Shanghai designed and constructed offices for Davis Wright Tremaine and Clyde & Co.

Some other legal clients over the years include Bryan Cave, Deacons Solicitors and Notaries, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher, Masons, Shadbolt & Co., Troutman Sanders, and White & Case.
